

India-Libya Bilateral Relations

Background

India and Libya have traditionally enjoyed historic warm and friendly relations. India opened its Diplomatic Mission in Tripoli in 1969. The relations further strengthened with the visit of the then Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi to Libya in 1984. India has regularly supported Libya at international fora and welcomed the UNSCR 1506 adopted on 12 September 2003, lifting sanctions imposed on Libya.

Following 2011 political turmoil, India recognized the National Transition Council (NTC) on 16 November 2011 and continued to extend support at various fora. India provided humanitarian assistance of US$ 1 million through the United Nation's Office of Commissioner of Humanitarian Aid. This was followed by another humanitarian assistance in the form of life saving drugs and medical equipment worth US$ 1 million delivered to NTC in January 2012. A Libyan delegation visited India in December 2011 to explore the possibility of treatment of injured Libyans in India. Govt. of India also sent a team of prosthetic experts 'Jaipur Foot' to Libya for fitting artificial limbs.

In view of the fragile political and security situation in Libya, about 3800 Indian nationals were evacuated in 2014, which included 6 Indians kidnapped by ISIS. The Mission was temporarily relocated in Tunisia in 2011, then to Malta, and resumed its operations Tripoli in 2012, but was closed down in April 2019 due to worsening security situation. A skeletal staff of a consular clerk and a gardener was maintained at the Embassy Residence in Tripoli, while EoI, Tunis was accredited to look after affairs of Libya.

With improvement in security situation in Libya, the Mission in Tripoli has been reopened since July 2024 in order to revive the momentum of bilateral relationship, and subsequently, the ban on travel of Indians to Libya was lifted in August 2024, which was in force since April 2016 on security considerations.

Indian community in Libya & repatriation

Prior to the 2011 uprising, the number of Indians in Libya was estimated to be around 18,000. Indian professionals were mainly engaged in hospitals and teaching institutions, whereas major part of manpower was employed in construction projects. During the revolution, most of them were repatriated to India in February/March 2011. A few thousand Indians, however, continued to stay in Libya. The assistance rendered by Indian doctors and paramedics in Libya during the revolution was deeply appreciated. Gradually more Indians returned to Libya, and in early 2014, there were about 6000 Indians.

In July 2014, due to deterioration in security situation following the destruction of Tripoli International Airport, GOI carried out a second evacuation exercise, bringing back 3793 Indians, out of which 1330 were repatriated at GOI cost. In view of security considerations, GOI imposed a ban on travel of Indian nationals to Libya in April 2016, which has now been lifted since August 2024. However, Indian workers in small number continued to reach Libya through third countries in search of jobs. About 5000 Indian nationals are currently in Libya, which predominantly includes blue collar workers and some professionals as well as those who have married Libyans and have been living there for several years.
